CONTRIBUTIONS TO TEACHING PRACTICE

Selected Course Development

Music and its Contexts (MU100). Currently developing blended learning version of required introductory course for all first year music students at Wilfrid Laurier University. Co-developed classroom version of course with Drs. Kirsten Yri and Peter Hatch.

Sounds of the Sacred: Music of the Soul. Explores sacred music in a broad variety of cultural contexts, examines power relationships, appropriation, conflict, identity, tradition, and authenticities (selected as a course for the Smithsonian Institution, 2004-05)

Engaging Global Musics: Third year course that looks at global music intersections especially with Western classical music. Involves direct experience through performance, composition, and arranging of global crossover works.

Pedagogic Innovation

As a teacher I have developed into a facilitator, setting the stage for students to experience, discover, and reflect upon things themselves. I view my role as creating space for discovery, creativity, and reflection and contemplation of direct experience. In my ensemble rehearsals and academic courses I seek to cultivate community that supports and enhances ongoing development, growth, and personal transformation of both students and teacher through practices such as:

|--------------------------------|--|
| Experiential Learning | Direct musical experience speaks volumes and moves students towards a transformation perhaps more profound and complete than one encountered through standard academic resources alone. My classes regularly begin with group improvisations. These experiences cultivate community and empathy both within the class and with guests. Discovery assignments encourage students to leave their comfort zones to explore unfamiliar cultures and experiences. |
| Technology - Enhanced Learning | Technology can both enhance and extend the classroom experience. Students generate personal blogs and complete regular reflections on their classroom and discovery experiences. These are linked to a class blog, enabling participants to communicate with one another directly. Short video assignments encourage students to develop creative and engaging content. Live streaming is used to engage guests and students who are unable to attend class in person. |
| Indigenization | Indigenization of the university curriculum is vital to its longevity and relevance, connecting it to land and peoples, past and present. At Wilfrid Laurier University and the Waterloo Lutheran Seminary, I engage First Nations facilitators each term in courses such as Music and Its Contexts, Music in Community Contexts, Sounds of the Sacred, and Sacred Music and Healing Traditions, and regularly engage in First Nations song sharing and ensemble performance with women's drum and song group, Mino Ode Kwewak N'Gamowak (K. Laurila, director). |
| Cultural Transmission | I engage both sacred and secular practitioners from other musical cultures in both courses and collaborative ensemble work. Recent guests with whom ongoing relationships have been established include:

Gary Diggins: multi-instrumentalist, community music therapist, expressive arts therapist, and performer, Guelph, Ontario |

Rev. Dr. Paul Poovathingal: Carnatic musician and vocalist known as the “Singing Priest of India,” Kerala, India

I Dewa Made Suparta: Balinese gamelan master and teacher of kecak (Balinese monkey chant), Waterloo, Ontario

Dawud Wharmsby: the world’s leading practitioner and performer of English nasheed (Islamic song in modern musical style), Kitchener, Ontario
